Introduction

Battle Quest

Battle Quest (BQ) is a field combat LARP. The action takes place in the fictional world of Warhammer Fantasy. The game will take you for 3 days right in the middle of the conflict between two private armies: De Croy's Quest and Alvarez's Trading Post. You may take the role of a member of one of either army units, or an inhabitant of the neutral city of Volksdorf. Whatever your chosen affiliation, exciting adventures, fights, battles, and experiences await you. You will be able to taste daily life in the reality of a fictional conflict, enjoy local amenities, as well as enjoy local attractions. For the bravest of you, the secretive and dangerous tunnels will also lay open – if you wish to search for more treasures and mysteries.

What is a LARP?

LARP (Live Action Role-playing) – is an activity on the border of gaming and theatre. Members improvise while playing various roles, creating a world around them and living through various situations together in real-time. Participation in a LARP mean that for a while you will become part of a fantastical world, which you typically saw as though through an impenetrable window – while reading a book, watching a movie, playing a computer game. You take on the role of a hero, wear a costume, and live through adventures. Each decision you make has a direct effect on everything around you, and may have a profound impact on the world's history depending on how things develop. It's easy – just act exactly how you think the character you are playing should act.

Warhammer Fantasy World

The iconic world of Warhammer Fantasy was created by Games Workshop for supporting an RPG system and a table-top figure game. The fictional reality is similar to the real-world medieval and renaissance period. The majority of it's worlds have direct similarities with particular nations in our history. For example, the Empire resembles renaissance Germany, Bretonia is very much like medieval France, and the Norsemen are based on Viking culture. The creators added magic, different races (elves, dwarves, hobbits, etc.) and chaos – a deadly and mysterious force that destroys and swallows everything and anything it touches.

More about the Warhammer Fantasy can be found in the many handbooks and rulebooks created by Games Workshop. The primary source of lore used by the organisers of BQ are the books comprising the 2nd Edition of Warhammer Fantasy Role Play, published in Poland by Copernicus Publishing Corporation. But please remember that the world of the LARP follows its own rules, and the final word on anything that takes place or is allowed/permitted lies with the organisers of the game.

Do I need to be a Warhammer Fantasy expert?

Absolutely not. The Warhammer world is very rich and embracing, thus allowing almost any fantasy idea to be explained and justified. Moreover, due to the technological limitation of this world, it is also very easy to explain lack of suck knowledge or understanding. After all, what would a minor footman with daily access to little more than his sword and a campfire in the Imperial camp know about the geopolitical complexities across the whole world?

Basic rules of Battle Quest

Field Combat LARP – we focus on military activities, the majority of players take on various forms of warrior/soldier roles.

Simulation-Gaming – we strive to recreate a fantastical field of battle, where there are two opposing sides at war with each other.

Non-Stop Game – the game takes place non-stop from the begging to the end of the larp with non breaks.

Safety – always remember that the safety of you and other players is an absolute priority.

No fighting inside camps – fighting within the boundaries of the various unit camps is strictly forbidden.

What you see is what you get – characters do not have any 'skill points', 'stats', or 'paper-based abilities'. Fighting takes place on a trust and honesty basis.

360° Illusion – we aim to recreate the Warhammer world as accurate as possible, using realistic costumes, props, effects, and equipment. To further support this, use of any modern items is NOT allowed. This includes costume elements, tools, tents, and other items.

No possibility of a peaceful resolution – Alvarez and de Croy will NOT agree to a peaceful resolution of this conflict under any circumstance, whether it be via a ceasefire or alliance. Recruitment of the neutral units within Volksdorf IS allowed.

Individual character creation – the organisers of the larp will NOT create character sheets or individual quests for any attendee, this is entirely up to the player.

Don't be an asshole – remember that larps are supposed to be a fun game. We expect everyone to apply common sense, fair play and have respect for all other players.

No off-game debates – if you believe someone is breaking the rules of the game, inform the organisers so that they can handle the situation appropriately. Under no circumstance should you enter a debate about the rules yourself during the game. That damages the immersion for yourself & anyone who might be in the area.

Sides of the conflict

De Croy's Quest

De Croy's Quest consists of units gathered by Julie de Croy, an heiress to an old Bretonnian family. She wants to regain lost position and clear her family's tarnished name. Loyalty, justice, honor, tradition, fanaticism – those are the traits that describe this side of the conflict best. Steel-clad Bretonnian knights fighting side by side with scouts armed with bows; units of peasant militia and hardened mercenaries that can boast a long and honourable career – all of them and more you will meet in Lady de Croy's camp.

You can read more about the de Croy's Quest in the handbook describing this side of conflict in the game's setting. You can find it here.

Alvarez's Trading Post

A mercenary army gathered around their leader, Esteban Alvarez, a merchant, discoverer, sailor and adventurer hailing from the far Lustria, who for many years has been a resident in Marienburg. Alvarez is a practical man and an enthusiast of everything modern – that's why the traits that describe him best are pragmatism, independence, development, professionalism and boldness. Fighting for him you may find both warriors sworn to Myrmidia, as well as gladiators from Tilean arenas, while Kislevite nobility will fight side by side with Norsca warriors.

You can read more about the Trading Post in the handbook describing this side of conflict in the game's setting. You can find it here.

The Free City of Volkssdorf

A settlement that was established on the ravaged Kislevite frontier where a new, valuable mineral was discovered. Adventurers, troublemakers and other vagabonds create an interesting, though dangerous motley of Volkssdorf inhabitants. Everything is under the scrutiny of the Mayor, Hanna Krude, who mitigates conflicts, represents the law and makes sure that the city is growing and making profit.

You can read more about Volkssdorf in the handbook that you can find here.

Forces of Evil

A bizarre alliance between orcs, beastmen, skavens, the undead and the cultists of the gods of Chaos. No one knows what drew them here and why they haven't killed each other so far – in fact, they seem to be cooperating and don't let people gather the newly discovered mineral.

You can read more about the Forces of Evil and their role on BQ 2019 in a handbook that you can find here.

Safety

BQ is a game which is meant to provide as much fun and adventure as it is possible to all players. We take the safety of all those present very seriously, and have gone to great length to secure the area of the larp. During the game, camp of each side of the conflict will have access to a trained medic, ready to help in the event of an accident or any serious ailment. We have also given great attention to the weapons used at the larp.

During the game, please take note of your safety as well as that of other players. Be wary of uneven terrain and rocks, make sure you have comfortable shoes with thicker lining to protect your ankles against sprains/breaks. When leaving the camp at night, make sure you take a source of light with you. Even if you intend to remain in the dark, light may be needed in critical moments. NEVER run in the dark, it is VERY easy to run into a tree or fall into a hole in the ground.

Always carry water with you. Dehydration can and often does lead to nausea and heat-stroke. Protect your head from the sun during the day, and do not forget to use some form of defence against ticks and mosquitoes. Lyme disease is a very real threat, do NOT underestimate it.

Consume alcohol responsibly. When under the influence of alcohol, you do not just endanger yourself, but also those around you. You lose control of your own strength and swing during fights, and increase the chances of tripping on the uneven terrain. Also, do not hold back from warning those under heavy influence of alcohol that they may be acting out of order. If the warning does not help or stop them, and the person becomes a threat to anyone – immediately inform the organisers.

Remember about mutual respect and empathy towards other players. What may not be offensive to you, may be to another person. If you think someone may be feeling uncomfortable in a given situation, back off. ALWAYS respect the safety words, not just in combat but also in social interactions.

Handle fire very carefully. Remember that we are playing during the height of summer, and it takes very little to start a major fire. That is why it is STRICTLY FORBIDDEN to handle open flames (torches or fireplaces) outside of designated areas. Never use pyrotechnics in closed rooms, or on dry surfaces. Do not leave fires unattended, and if you believe a fire is dangerous – try to put it out immediately and inform the organisers as soon as possible.

During BQ 2019 the use of pyrotechnics by the participants is strictly forbidden! If you want to use any kind of pyrotechnics (even a small fire-cracker or even the simplest smoke candle) you have to get permission from the organizers - they may give a permission to use such objects under the control of people authorised by the organizers.

When fighting using larp weapons, remember to control your strength. Try to use safe ground when engaging in a fight and avoid uneven terrain. More on fighting is available in the Fighting and Magic handbook.

WARNING: even if you follow all of the above rules, it is possible for unfortunate accidents to take place. Larp fighting is a 'contact sport', and by participating in it, you must be aware that there is always a risk of injury – much like during amateur football.

People who are reported to the organisers for not respecting the above rules and safety guidelines may, at the discretion of the organisers, receive a warning. A second warning may lead to expulsion from the LARP.

In the event where a person causes a very major threat to the safety of anyone in the game, the organisers reserve the right to expel such a person from the terrain of the larp immediately..

Safety words

For the comfort of players at BQ, we make use of the mechanic of safety words red-yellow-green. The use of these words should be relatively common, as thanks to them we will know whether the person we play with is comfortable with the level of interaction taking place. During the game, any person can say (in English) one of these words – and all those who hear it, should act accordingly:

Red – I do not want this, please stop immediately. The scene, in which the players is taking part, is for some reason to intense or the person no longer wants to take part in it. The reason for the word 'red' should immediately be eliminated, and the game should proceed as though the word 'red' was never used and the unfortunate scene never took place.

Example: Kasia, playing her character, grabs Pawel by the arm and begins to shake him violently, causing him pain. Pawel says 'red'. Kasia should at this point immediately let go of Pawel, and not enter into any physical contact with him until the end of the scene.

Yellow – Let's please keep the intensity where it is. The Scene taking place is at the right level of intensity but should not be escalated. In practice, this means we either do not continue the topic that is being discussed at the time or we do not escalate the violence that is taking place.

Example: Kasia, playing her character, grabs Pawel by the arm and begins to shake him violently, causing him pain. Pawel says 'yellow'. Kasia can continue to shake Pawel, but she should not do anything that might cause him additional pain or could further encroach upon his privacy.

Green – Lets go further. The scene taking place can be escalated further. In practice, this often means that we can take things to the next level, and it is even expected to do so unless we respond with 'yellow', for example.

Example: Kasia, playing her character, grabs Pawel by the arm and begins to shake him violently, causing him pain. Pawel uses the word 'green'. Pawel likes more pain. Kasia can continue to shake Pawel, and she can do things that might cause him additional pain or can further encroach upon his privacy.

Your character

Creating your own adventure

The organisers of BQ do not create personal characters for participating players. No personal quests of objectives will be provided, nor will there be any dependencies between individuals created. What is given, is limited to the overall plot outline, acceptance of the various units attending, and building various missions and high-level objectives for people to complete.

If you believe that participating in a particular plot may be fun – go for it. Of course, keep in mind respect of other players and the rules set out by BQ. If in order to take part in a plot you believe you may need something that you do not have, or you are not sure if it is even possible – contact the organisers. They are bound to help you somehow.

A living world of adventure

Our objective is to create a living and believable world. One, in which you can feel as though you are part of something bigger. Where the camps are alive, everyone has a role and a place in the society. Where, in order to achieve something, you actually have to do it yourself. Where you can fully embrace the world around you.

During BQ, there will be lots of time for fights, tactical plays, and epic battles. You will not be short of places to explore, derelict ruins, or spy games. And after all this, you will have time to rest in the tavern, relax in the shade as your food rations are prepared, challenge someone to a duel in the arena, tasting various drinks by the fire with your friends, and many other past-time actions.

The game will be non-stop. This means, that each participant will eat, sleep, and even go to the latrines in character.

BQ is a LARP for you, if:

- you like fighting using safe LARP weapons,
- You like creating your own character,
- You do not need a rich plot or a complex web of relations to have a good time,
- You prefer simple rules over complex gaming mechanics,
- You can about and actively support high quality props and costumes during larps.

BQ is not a LARP for you, if:

- you need a complex web of relations and activities created by the game organisers to enjoy the game,
- you need a character sheet written by the organisers,
- you prefer mechanics over simple what-you-see-is-what-you-get solutions,
- in larps, you do not care about high quality props, costumes, and paraphernalia.

How to create your character?

As we already mentioned, players create their own characters at BQ. Remember, however, that your character has to fit into the world of Warhammer and must be aligned to one of the sides of the conflict.

When creating your character, forget about 6 foot dwarves or goblins wearing military trousers. Moreover, this goes beyond physical attributes of players or the way the costume looks. At BQ, there is in place for elite halberdiers with no halberds or bretonian princes looking like rat-catchers. If your costume doesn't immediately show your profession/standing, something went wrong at some point in character creation. If you want to play a rat-catcher posing as a bretonian prince, the best you can expect is the flogging of a lifetime. We hope to create a true 360° illusion, and that would not be possible if the character in the world do not look like who they are.

Magic Roles

There are two types of magic-using roles, which players can play at BQ after clear agreement and acceptance from the organisers. Don't worry though – these are extremely rare and highly specialised, comprising but a tiny fraction of participants. These roles include additional abilities for the characters, however most importantly, they add a number of duties on account of playing such unique roles within the mechanic of the game. These roles are Clerics and Mages.

If you want to play one of these two roles, you must accept all the associated functions and duties, and send your character using the special character form. The number of such specialised roles is very limited, meaning only a finite number of players will be allowed to play such characters. The primary reason for this is due to the world we play in – educated or magic-wielding characters are extremely rare.

More information about specialist roles is available in the Fighting and Magic handbook.

Non-humans

Humans aren't the only intelligent creatures in the world of BQ. Elves, dwarves, hobbits, beastmen, orcs, vampires, humanoid rats (known as Skaven) – to name but a few. Each race has a number of unique characteristics, cultures, rituals, beliefs, and norms.

You can join a unit which brings a particular race together. But remember that this could pose a serious challenge. To maintain the quality of the game, you must look and act as a member of the race you decided to portray. In order to be an elf, for example, you need more than just prosthetic pointy ears – an appropriate costume and props. Being an orc goes beyond painting your skin green – you need a mask that changes the look of your face, powerful armour, and specific weapons.

If you would like to join such a unit, we highly recommend you contact the commander of the particular unit you wish to join. That way, you will be able to learn not just the expectation placed on you and your costume, but also support and tips relating to your preparations.

If the character you play has a thick skin or a different armour equivalent, your costume must reflect this. It is important, however, that it provides a real and physical form of protection from hits with safe weapons. Armour cannot be replaced by glyphs or any form of 'force field'.

Registering Units

If you want to register a unit with some friends, or you have enough things to equip a full unit, let the organisers know as soon as possible! On BQ website, you can find a special form to do this – in there, we ask about some specific details pertaining to your unit and a simple overview of what you plan to do.

The organisers help each unit as much as possible in terms of props, items, logistics, additional activities, missions, exploration, and all other things that may improve the quality and the game for all members of the unit.

It is important to remember, that the internal structure of the unit is solely and completely up to its members.

The means that it is up to the players how they will act, what is their approach to their leadership and to the main leaders of the units, who will be their direct commander, any internal relations, which missions they plan to complete... in short – we highlight this again and again – players have absolute freedom in the creation of their own adventure (of course within the overall parameters of the larp).

Joining a unit

We encourage joining pre-existing units. On our website, you can find the tap 'factions', and within it, descriptions of the various units that are registered with us as well as their allegiance. Firstly, choose the unit which you like and one which clearly states that it accepts new members. Next, contact the unit commander, and discuss how you might want to join the group. Each unit description has a link to the relevant Facebook group.

If you don't know which unit to join, make sure you write on the general Facebook group for all BQ participants – "Karczma u Kenigera". We are sure you'll receive loads of invitation and offers!

You don't have time for all this? This is your first time, and you don't want to invest money into equipment before you're sure this is the kind of fun you like? We have designed special 'Starter Packs' for precisely this type of situation. More about this in the next section!

Its not just about about fighting - non-combat characters

BQ is a game aimed at action and conflict. However, even the most bloody of wars, had many non-combatants on the front lines. Nobles, advisors, shamans, camp assistants, quartermasters, explorers, scholars, escapees, cooks, medics, clerics, mages... and many, many more.

Such characters are vital to ensure the reality of this world. This is why we don't just allow such character to be played, we plan to create a wealth of plots where such characters will be able to flourish and enjoy the game most.

Special offer for new players

BQ is a game friendly to new players. We, however, don't end this with just a statement. We have a special offer for such players.

Any player that does not have their own equipment is allowed to make use of such a pack.

All you have to do, is purchase the 'Starter Pack' ticket, and you will receive:

- ☞ a full costume comprising of trousers, shirt, and gambeson (to be returned after the game)
- ☞ appropriate weaponry, such as a sword or another fighting implement (to be returned after the game)
- ☞ a specially prepared part of your factions campsite, designated only for those with the starter pack, all prepared by the organisers
- ☞ a unit commander, always played by an experienced player whose role is specifically to ensure new players can find it easy to enjoy the game and get involved in plots they will enjoy most

Units designed for new players on both sides of conflict – de Croy's Quest and Alvarez's Trading Post – can be found among other units on na naszej stronie internetowej.

If you want to play alone, you do not need to register to any unit. In the form, you need to choose which side of the conflict you claim allegiance. This option is most appropriate for those playing bards, artists, mages, clerics, diplomats, scholars, and traders. You can also play a knight-errant or an ogre that is terrorising the area.

Underage players

BQ is a game for those who are at least 16 years old. If you are underage, during registration you must provide written permission for you to take part in the game from either one of your parents or your legal guardian. During the game, there must always be an adult person who is responsible for your actions and safety. Lack of either of these steps, will lead to you not being allowed to play or take part in the game.

Equipment

A common question asked, is 'what should I actually bring with me?'. Thanks to the list below, you should be comfortable in the belief you won't forget anything. This list isn't absolute and finite, of course. Any participant is allowed to bring whatever they see fit, so long as it fits the world and is permitted according to the rules of BQ.

Costume

Your costume should not just fit the character you play, but also not break any of the larp rules. At BQ, we do not allow any modern clothing during the game.

Playing Solo

Your costume should at the very least effectively imitate relevant clothing. So leave your polo shirt and jeans in the car, and enter the game in a flax shirt and trousers. Or whatever else you deem appropriate.

Remember – larp organisers have the right to ask anyone considered to be wearing inappropriate clothing (including modern elements) to leave and change.

Special attention is given to footwear. ‘Fantasy’ or ‘Historic’ footwear can often be difficult to find, but what is far more important than looks in this case – is safety. Do not worry if you plan to wear military boots or sports shoes (absolutely without any bright colours – black or brown, and above the ankle ideally) – and if they really are too modern, cover them with cloth or something similar. The organizers reserve the right to remove from the event participants who do not adhere to the dress code.

Safe weapons

BQ is a combat-heavy larp, where fighting plays an important role. However, only approved safe weapons may be used – from a number of pre-approved producers and latex-based home-made weapons (which must be approved by the organisers during registration on-site). PCV and lagging-based weapons or other replicas that do not conform to standards of quality or safety will not be allowed. Don’t worry though – your character doesn’t have to keep reaching for their weapon all the time, so a weapon is not something that is necessary to have with you all the time.

It is possible to hire an approved safe weapon for the duration of the game. You can do this on our online store in the ‘hire’ tab.

Tent

BQ is a game that takes place non-stop (including at night), this is why you will need an appropriate place to sleep. As part of your camp arrangements, you can set your tent so long as it conforms to quality standards and game rules. Remember – modern tourist tents are NOT allowed at BQ, they cause too much visual pollution.

If you don’t have a place to sleep – contact the unit you will play with. We also offer tent rental on our website for the duration of the game.

Water container and cutlery

BQ takes place in August – one of the hottest months in Poland. Dehydration is a major threat, which is why each player should have a water container with them all the time. It can be a glass bottle, leather water-bag, or metal canteen – it’s important that it does not look modern (must conform to game rules). Each camp, as well as Volksdorf, will always have access to clean drinking water, available to anyone.

Apart from a water container, you should have your own bowl (wooden, for example), and cutlery. These will be very useful if wanting to have a meal in the field before your next mission. Don’t worry too much, though. The tavern in Volksdorf is fully stocked, and whenever you order something there – it will be served on in-game plates and with appropriate cutlery.

Head cover

Another item that may help greatly with dealing with the heat, is some form of headwear. Appropriate hats or caps may provide the shade needed, and will protect against overheating or even heat-stroke. If you don’t have anything like this, don’t worry! A bandana or even a simple piece of cloth wrapped around the head can help as well!

Medicine and other relevant items

If you must take any medicine regularly, make sure this is ALWAYS with you and that you do not forget to take it. Moreover, it is worth having sunscreen with you (again – to protect against the heat and sun), and some form of spray against mosquitoes and other insects (due to the terrain where the larp takes place).

Light source

BQ takes place at night as well. The terrain may be dangerous, which is why we always recommend having an appropriate source of light available. Of course few things spoil the immersion of a dark and evil crypt more than a flashlight which shines with the strength of a thousand suns. This is why we recommend lanterns specialist lamps (some of which use delicate LED lighting – preferably those that give out a “warm light”) – or, if nothing else is possible – candles for static and secured locations such as campsites. For your safety, we also recommend you have a small flashlight, but note this is only to be used in emergency situations.

What can I and what can’t I do during the game

Battle quests

Battle Quest is not just the name of our larp, but also the type of gaming system we use as part of it. During the game, the headquarters of both sides of the conflict will be informed of tactical activities, that when completed, will have a direct effect on the conditions of the final battle. The role of the HQ staff is to choose the appropriate units to each mission. Battle quests will typically fall into one of these categories: escort, hold the position, search and retrieve, traps/ambush, tactical diversion activities.

Exploration

'They say, that the walls of the fort inhabited by the Evil are full of mystery, secret tunnels, and dark corners. In the ancient mine shafts, you can find an almost mythical mineral. A mineral gladly purchased by the various inhabitants of Volksdorf – or exchanged for goods or services. Remember though, there are many who decide to try their luck, and the dwarven ruins are full of danger and beasts...'

What's this about? During the game, you will be able to find pieces of a special 'mineral' (what does it look like, you will find out during the game). You will be able to exchange the 'mineral' in Volksdorf at a special stall – for items provided to us by our sponsors. Items purchased at this stall using this 'mineral' will be owned by the player who buys them – you will be able to take them home with you after the game! But of course, nothing stops you from using this 'mineral' for bartering with other players or as currency to purchase services!

Treason

During the game, NO UNIT is allowed to betray the side of the conflict they are allied to at the beginning. Units stationed in Volksdorf are allowed to hire themselves out to either side of the conflict, however once a deal is agreed and a mission is agreed – they are NOT allowed to betray the paying side under any circumstance. After completing the agreed mission, they can end their loyalty and change sides for the next bidder.

A single player may decide to leave the unit they are in or even change sides for plot reasons. If, however, it turns out that a player joined a unit with the intention to leave and in any way effect the units or sides chances of victory – such an action will be deemed as cheating and the player may receive a warning or even be excluded from the larp entirely. Changing the character's affiliation must be consulted both with the organizers and the leader of the unit the player belongs to.

Theft

Due to the high monetary value of equipment used by players, 'in-game theft' is strictly forbidden. This includes various items, such as in-game currency. There are three exceptions to this rule:

1) If the person that is being robbed clearly agrees to part with their personal items, we are allowed to take it away in-game – but it is our responsibility to return the items to their rightful owner at the end of the game.

Example: Defenders of the Faith, a mercenary marauder group, prepares an ambush on a path. Edward, a lonely trader, walks into the trap. Edward, in exchange for his life, willingly and personally offers his back with gold. Players in this situation CAN take the gold, and can do with Edward as they please.

Defenders of the Faith, a mercenary marauder group, prepares an ambush on a path. Edward, a lonely trader, walks into the trap. He begins to run away, but doesn't stand a chance and is soon skewered by the marauder's arrows. When searching the body, they find his bag of gold. The players CANNOT take the gold from his body.

2) Items that CAN be stolen, will be clearly marked with a red piece of cloth, available from the organisers. Such items MUST be returned to the rightful owner after the game.

Example: Defenders of the Faith, a mercenary marauder group, prepares an ambush on a path. Edward, a lonely trader, walks into the trap. He begins to run away, but doesn't stand a chance and is soon skewered by the marauder's arrows. When searching the body, they find his bag of gold which is marked with a red piece of cloth as an item which they can take. The players CAN take the bag with gold from his body.

To avoid a situation during the game in which the players actually search through every inch of the victim's clothing or touch the "body", the rule is that every defeated person that hears "I search you" or "I search the body" must give up all items eligible for theft.

3) 'Minerals' found on the game terrain CAN be stolen.

Spying

It is allowed to observe, sneak up on, and spy on the activities of enemy camps and/or units. The identity of the spy must be possible to be found out in-game, and no player is allowed to use any off-game symbols of conversations to gain information.

It is forbidden to join or give the clear impression of joining a unit with the intention of spying on them for the opposing side.

Off-topic

We hope to create a fully immersive gaming world. Nothing spoils this as much as loud conversations that are not in-character – so called 'off-topic' conversations. If you really have to talk about family life, smoke a modern cigarette, or discuss the latest football match – find a secluded and private place, ideally outside of the game grounds.

Each camp, like Volksdorf, will have a special organiser's tent – the inside of which will be off-game, and in specific circumstance you can go inside and use this area. Whether to just rest for a moment, if you need a quick return to reality, or need to do something 'modern' (such as make a phone call).

Economy

In-game currency

During the game, players will be allowed to trade using in-game currency that has actual monetary value. There will be one or more types of coin, with the necessary symbol on them.

For in-game currency, you will be able to:

- ☞ purchase beer, wine, other beverages, as well as food in the taverns available (drinking water is provided by larp organisers)
- ☞ buy equipment from various traders. Items purchased this way become persona property of the person purchasing it.
- ☞ sell or buy various services – from shoe cleaning and cooking food, to the allegiance of whole mercenary units. It is important to note that on both sides of such trade, there will be players. Organisers or NPC are NOT allowed to accept in-game currency for their actions.
- ☞ use the money in any way you personally deem appropriate

In-game currency can be purchased in main HQ of the organisers in Volksdorf.

WARNING:

- ☞ In-game currency CANNOT be stolen, forcefully taken, or in any other way 'snatched' from any player.
- ☞ In-game currency provided by the organisers has equal value in PLN (Polish Zloty)
- ☞ Each player without exception begins the game with the same amount of in-game currency – ZERO. Each player is able to change this by purchasing in-game currency before the game or during the game at the appropriate locations.
- ☞ Once the game is finished, it will be possible to exchange in-game currency into real-world monies.

To help everyone relax – the game does NOT intend to move towards any 'pay to win' model in any way:

- ☞ in-game currency CANNOT be used to purchase any special items, such as alchemical mixtures, magic amulets, artefacts, or any other item that may effect the game
- ☞ in-game currency CANNOT be used to purchase information, maps, gossip, or any additional insight into the plot from staff or
- ☞ in-game currency CANNOT be used to bribe or purchase the services of any NPC, staff member, or any being/creature under the commands of the organisers.
- ☞ The characters status in-game will NOT in any way be affected by the amount of in-game monies they have, and there will NOT be any locations in the game that are controlled by NPC's or organisers that will only be available by paying for entry or having a sack of coins.
- ☞ Organisers do not foresee ANY events or game aspects that will require additional payments.

Trading certificates

Those participants of Battle Quest who want to perform any activities during the larp that may bring them profit, are obliged to receive a permission from the organizers in a form of a trading certificate. In order to do so, one will have to fill a form we will soon publish. Depending on the planned trade, acquiring a certificate may be free of charge, or may entail a fee (all terms of agreement will be discussed individually).

Craftsmen who want to display their goods for sale, may apply via email, but their fee will be paid in a barter system - just like in the previous years. The details are published on the BQ information channels.

Game terrain

The game takes place in the area of Fort Prusy and Fort II, and on the military training ground between the two locations. The borders of the game terrain are marked by the organisers. There will be a number of key locations, described below.

Camps

The two main locations are the two camps. They will be permanently in-game, which means constant world simulation with no chance for off-game conversations or activities (except inside the aforementioned organisers tents). Camp structure, tent layouts, and other positioning will be decided and announced before the larp on-site with unit commanders and organisers. Due to safety concerns and game fluidity, it has been decided that the camps are strictly non-combat areas.

NO combat of any kind is allowed inside the camps. This means that no fights can take place there, whether during the day or night. No surprise attacks, assassinations, or theft of resources. We are aware, however, that these are attractive element of the game, which can lead of wonderful adventures and experiences. This is why such actions will be implemented into the battle quests.

Camps should be teeming with life, and they should be places where players rest and sleep – but also do a number of things key to their characters. Whether political arguments, military exercises, or ritual dances by the fire – this is what the camps are for. What goes with this – is that if you want to place the unit camp outside of these areas, this must be agreed with the organisers first.

Fort ruins

The ruins of the dwarven fort (Fort Prusy and the area nearby) is the lair of the Forces of Evil.

This is the location where you can find the mythical 'mineral', which can be exchanged for equipment. It is an area created for combat and exploration. Please remember that this area is rich with uneven terrain and holes. We plan to mark as much of this as possible, but that does NOT excuse anyone from lack of common sense. Be careful when in this area. Most important, be careful in the tunnels, which you should not enter without appropriate lighting and under no circumstance should you use pyrotechnics in there.

Free City of Volksdorf

In the game, there is a neutral location, where there is a complete ceasefire in effect from both sides. There are a number of unique locations in the fort, including:

- ☞ the tavern, where you can exchange in-game currency for drink, or food – or relax by the fire, singing songs and listening to the bards. Perhaps a tale or two from the wider world even?
- ☞ merchant stalls, where you can exchange in-game currency for items and equipment which later become the personal property of the player.
- ☞ the Pleasure House, where warriors will find peace and relaxation from battle and combat,
- ☞ the Gamblind Den, when you can relax and play cards or dice,
- ☞ notice board (for everyone's use, including players), where you will find various commissions, missions, and information from the organisers.

Within the grounds of Volksdorf, there is a permanent ceasefire. This, however, is the effect of in-game agreements – meaning it CAN be knowingly broken by players. So long as they are willing to face the consequences of their actions, of course - which may also entail expulsion from the city with no possibility of return.

The Free City of Volksdorf was originally designed as a location where participants of BQ can rest and relax from the ongoing conflict around them. A neutral ground, where you cannot fight, and a place where (unlike in the two camps), people can sleep without needing an affiliation to either side of the war. Those wanting to come to BQ because they simply like larps, the Warhammer world, but do not want to actively fight. Equally, for logistical reasons, it is a place where people can eat, drink, purchase items, or simply – take a shower.

We would like this overall character of the City to stay, while at the same time having some sort of in-game reason for there to be a completely neutral location in the middle of a ravaged frontier, and one which does not give either side a strong enough reason to be invaded or burned down.

The neutral area (much like all of BQ) can only function properly, if the participants of BQ themselves respect the laws and rules. Apart from being a place for various types of specialist activity, it is also a neutral ground to have interactions with members of the opposing army that aren't simply fights. Thanks to this, you can enjoy aspects of the war outside of camp-life and combat.

The staff and crew of the Free City are members of the game exactly like anyone else. This means that they will act and react to various events based on their own free will. So it can happen, that someone who breaks the laws of Volksdorf will not be allowed back inside.

Sanitary Facilities

The organisers provide access to off-game sanitary facilities in the vicinity of the camps. Moreover, showers are available in the grounds of Volksdorf.

Where can I find the organisers?

The organisers will always be available to participants, at any point of the night or day. Each camp will have a special organisers tent (the inside of which is off-game, meaning when entering it you will be your non-BQ self and not your character), in which you will be able to find:

- ☞ quartermaster, who can help with logistics and camp preparation (they will know the answers to various questions around sanitary facilities, props, in-game currency, and water)
- ☞ story master, who is in constant contact with the rest of this team and is fully responsible for the various things to do with the history of the game and its plot. (They are there for subjects such as plot ideas, questions, explanations, or plot assistance)
- ☞ medical help – a specialist trained in medical help (first aid), with the necessary equipment. (in the event of accidents, bruises, or any serious injury sustained during the game)

The main HQ of the organisers (including the main storage warehouse) will be in one of the buildings within Volksdorf.
